thing can more adequately express the care and liberality with which Spring stocks have been assembled throughout our entire building than the suberb collections of

New Silks and Dress Goods

Decemovelty, refinement and completeness each contribute to an assemblage that presents every new tissue and tint. de meeting the most exacting demand for goods of staple character.

Chief interest at the moment centers around the brilliant coterie of Frinted Silks, expressing the latest whim of fashion — luminous markle printings on satin; rich Viennese printings on Shantungs and Hidestais; sumptsous Yedde printings, witchingly Oriental; soft printed crapes, and the modish checked crapes. In foulards the simple printings rule—refined black-and-white and blue-and-white data are elegance and quiet good taste.

The printed-warp taffetas are in large demand. The Martine printings on chiffon—so much adored by Poiret—well deserve their materiaty. Then there are richly tinselled tissues, a varied group of vestings, and complete color assortments of plain poplins, cote de chaval and other corded weaves as well as taffetas, crape de chines and charmeuse, of course. The popular Golfine is shown in pleasing variety of colorings.

Among the woolen dress golds, gabardines hold large interest and are broadly represented, in plain and crepe weaves, as are the much favored failles. Gabardine checks and novelty stripes appear with grounds that are exactly matched in plain goods, for the making of coats or bodices to harmonize with the more richly colored skirts.

Serges, in ample variety, of course.

Suede de Laines and flannel cloths perform the functions of broadcloth, and have a novel charm and richness. Silk-and-wool crepes and moire poplins, crepe poplins and ripple cloths form a fabric family worthy of acquaintance.

Nowhere else in New York is there such a broad and varied assortment of the always lovable Challis, that promise greater popularity than ever this Spring.

When plans are in progress for new gowns, suits, skirts or wraps, don't fail to make a visit of inspection to view this comprehensive and authoritative assemblage.

To-morrow, we will present twelve new styles in
